Paris, October 7.

It being cuſtomary for the Gardes du Corps at Verſailles to give an Entertainment to any new Regiment that arrives there, the Regiment de Flandres was on Thurſday laſt ſumptuouſly entertained with a Dinner by that Corps in the Palace. After Dinner their Moſt Chriſtian Majeſties judged proper to honour the Company with their Preſence, and condeſcended to ſhew their Satisfaction at the general Joy which prevailed among the Gueſts. On their Appearance the Muſic inſtantly played the favourite Song of O Richard—O mon Roi, and the Company joining in Chorus, ſeemed to unite all Ideas in one unanimous Sentiment of Loyalty and Love for the King, and nothing was heard for ſome Time but repeated Shouts of Vive le Roi, within and without the Palace. In the Height of their Zeal they proceeded to tear the National Cockades from their Hats, and trampled them under their Feet. The Gardes du Corps ſupplied themſelves with Black Cockades, in the Room of thoſe they had treated with ſuch Diſdain. The News of theſe Proceedings ſoon reached Paris, where a general ill Humour viſibly gained Ground.

On Saturday there were great Diſturbances in the Palais Royal, and it became unſafe for any one to appear with Black Cockades, as ſeveral Foreigners experienced, from whoſe Hats they were torn with much Violence, and abuſive Language.

On Sunday the Confuſion increaſed, and a vaſt Concourſe of People tumultuouſly aſſembled at the Town Houſe, under the Pretence of demanding Bread,

Bread, and enquiring into the real Cauſes of the extreme Scarcity of it at this Seaſon of the Year.

On Monday Morning a Number of Women, to the Amount of upwards of Five Thouſand, armed with different Weapons, marched in regular Order to Verſailles, followed by the numerous Inhabitants of the Fauxbourgs, St. Antoine, and St. Marceau, with ſeveral Detachments of the City Militia; and in the Evening the Marquis de la Fayette, at the Head of 20,000 of that Corps, likewiſe marched to Verſailles.

On Tueſday Morning an Account was received of ſome Blood having been ſpilt. The Gardes du Corps fired on the Pariſians, and Five or Six Perſons, chiefly Women, were killed. The Regiment de Flandres was alſo drawn out to oppoſe this Torrent; but the Word to fire was no ſooner given, than they all to a Man clubbed their Arms, and, with a Shout of Vive la Nation, went over to the Pariſians. Some Troops of Dragoons that are quartered at Verſailles alſo laid down their Arms, and the Swiſs Detachments remained motionleſs, having received no Orders from their Officers to fire. The Gardes du Corps being thus abandoned, and overpowered by Numbers, fled precipitately into the Gardens and Woods, where they were purſued, many of them killed and taken Priſoners. Some of the Heads of thoſe who were killed were carried to Paris, and paraded through the Streets on Spikes. The ſame Morning, a Report came that the King, Queen and Royal Family were on their Way to Paris. Upon this the People began to aſſemble from all Parts of the Town; and above 50,000 of the Militia proceeded to line the Streets, and the Road to Verſailles. Their Majeſties and the Royal Family accordingly arrived between Seven and Eight o'Clock in the Evening, after having been Six Hours on the Road. The Carriages all proceeded to the Town Houſe. The Concourſe of People that attended is not to be deſcribed, and the Shouts of Vive la Nation filled the Air. From the Town Houſe they were conducted to the Palace of the Thuilleries, though totally unprepared for their Reception, where they paſſed the Night.
